As you can see, we are now running fudforum 3.0.5.

Please check your personal account settings, there were many problems in migration there. If you plan to post patches for U++ eventually, you can also use this opportunity to fill in your real name (this is now a requirement).

Please report any problems here, via PM or email.

Hello Mirek,

It seems that tree view is still present for unlogged user and me too. In my opinion tree view for answers is totally unreadable for common users.

BTW, Will this forum be integrated with Ultimate++ website like previous.

TreeView issue:

Sincerely,
Klugier

It doesn't work either. Moreover it destroyed topic list (Now it works in TreeView mode).

Screen:

I have got one more question. Are you sure that this update will protect Ultimate++ community against bots? I see a lot of new accounts that dosen't look like regular Ultimate++ users.

Each message entry includes a subject line, a reply icon, and the author's name. The authors listed include 'mirek', 'klugier', 'Didier', 'koldo', and 'BioBytes'. The thread is displayed in a standard forum layout with a list of messages and a 'Pomoc' button at the bottom.

The initial changes were hard to get used to but is getting better.

The lit and unlit bulbs and red and blue books are easy to distinguish.

With your previous bumpy circle it was difficult to distinguish between the colored and grayed in some lighting conditions.

If you are going to switch back to the colored bumpy circle for new posts consider just a circle but not grayed (just a bumpy circle with none of the lines inside the periphery).

If a final decision has not been made consider having a vote before "upload right images and icons".

Forum visuals are not finished yet. I think there are bigger issues to fix now.

Anyway, the target should be about the same as it was before. Only technically, this time I would rather like to use <iframe> to embed forum and minimize forum theming.

I will remember to tone down those gray icons.

I am not quite sure what you mean by the spam.

The primary antispam feature of the new forum is that first message gets always moderated. So spammers get registred, but are unable to post.

It is also possible to disable posting links until first N messages are approved.

Well, we can start moderating new accounts. I also suggest you to investigate admin setup of forum, perhaps you will find some solution.

Alternatively, I can also imagine adding some tool that automatically deletes new users that have not posted for some days or something like that. I would not really like to change to code of forum, but this could be done by some periodic cron job doing some (my)SQL.

Or... the reason why they are registering new accounts is that they can put a link to homepage there, which is then found by (google) bots and increases the pagerank of target page. Perhaps removing homepage link completely would fix the problem too.

OK, I have deleted users with zero posts, non-empty 'home_page' that joined more than 2 hours ago. This was one time only, but we could have a cron to do so.

I think we could define some rules here.

Like zero posts after 14 days user gets deleted even if he is confirmed.

2 hours after user with home_page is not confirmed, has home_page defined, he gets deleted...

Hello Mirek

It is clear that spammers fill the captcha correctly .

IMHO:

Quote:2 hours after user with home_page is not confirmed, has home_page defined, he gets deleted...

Ok

Quote:"Like zero posts after 14 days user gets deleted even if he is confirmed.
I do not like it. Many users never posts.

There are some ideas that could be interesting (from FUD here):

- Activating the Botscout.plugin (an open boot database)
- To try other captchas: Recaptcha.plugin, Riddlecaptcha.plugin, Mathcaptcha.plugin.
- Moderate user's first 5 messages
- N messages before allowing users to post links (Users are required to post more than N messages before they can embed links into their posts)

Quote:Or... the reason why they are registering new accounts is that they can put a link to homepage there, which is then found by (google) bots and increases the pagerank of target page agree.

1 message was already activated. For now I would say single post to check is enough, no need to waste time with 5.

Quote:

- N messages before allowing users to post links (Users are required to post more than N messages before they can embed links into their posts)

Now there is one thing I have missed before: this option is about links in signature too. I would say it could fix the problem considerably. I have activated 1 message too here, we will see how it is going...

Well, at least we do not have any spam in the actual forum yet, just in Members...

This could stop ~95% of the spam.

They post the spam with a link to what they are trying to sell: Ugg boots, designer clothes and bags, football T-shirts, porn, prescribed drugs, travel agency, etc..

That has been my experience of what the spam includes as a moderator on another forum.

edit: The U.S. has been trying to get China to crack down on spammers.

I'm not familiar with firefox live-bookmarks, but I assume they are based on RSS or RDF feeds.

The new feed address is <http://www.ultimatepp.org/forums/feed.php?mode=m&l=1&basic=1>

Also note that the options can be customized, as described in the help here.

koldo wrote on Mon, 07 April 2014 14:01In addition, what do you think about changing the captchas and using a bot database?

Well, there is single new user registered since yesterday and he might be genuine. So the only remaining problem with bots and spammers now is here

<http://www.ultimatepp.org/forums/index.php?t=actions&>

- I mean, you can see there they are still trying, but are now refused. Them still trying has some small negative impact on traffic bandwidth being wasted and some CPU resources dedicated, but nothing I would loose sleep about. IMO we can consider the "spam issue" resolved for now.

Especially, I am no big fan of elaborated captchas - too often I am unable to decode them myself

With your previous bumpy circle it was difficult to distinguish between the colored and grayed in some lighting conditions.
If you are going to switch back to the colored bumpy circle for new posts consider just a circle but not grayed (just a bumpy circle with none of the lines inside the periphery).

I will remember to tone down those gray icons.

I spent some time with M$ Paint.

As far as discernible difference between new posts and old your bumpy circle and no icon is the most difference.

After tinkering a bit with the current no new posts icon changing even the shape helps.

Here is an icon that is just like a minus sign.

Yes, the links of google search.

I'm not sure that the redirection works well : There is a brief message and we arrive on the forum index, where we are obliged to do a new search, not being sure to retrieve the same...

So, for now, I right click the google link, choose "copy the address of the link", paste it in the address field of my browser and add the missing "s" to go directly where the link points.
